

Barbara Zanchetta is a research fellow at the University of Tampere in the Academy of Finland's project "Conflict and Community: Transatlantic Relations in the 'Long' Twentieth Century" and a scholar at the Machiavelli Center for Cold War Studies (CIMA/University of Florence). She earned her degree in Political Science at the University of Urbino (2003) and her PhD in International History at the University of Florence (2007). She has written on the Nixon-Kissinger years, on U.S.-Soviet détente, and on the superpowers' involvement in various regions of the Third World.

She is currently completing a monograph provisionally entitled "From Dominance to Leadership: The Transformation of American Power in the 1970s." She is also the co-author of the forthcoming textbook Transatlantic Relations since 1945. An Introduction (London: Routledge, 2010).